

IS 0300—Pandemics, Bioterrorism, and International Security

July 22 – 24, 2015, 9:00 AM – 5:00 PM
GMU Arlington Campus

This three-day, non-credit course introduces participants to the challenges facing the world at the intersection of health and security.

Cutting-edge training. World-renowned instructors. Time to network with your peers.

3 Days of In-Depth Modules Including:

Lessons learned from Ebola, SARS, and H5N1 outbreaks Developing medical countermeasures
Balancing science and security in life sciences research Organizational strategies for coping with novel biological threats

Who Should Attend

Professionals and academics in public health, the life sciences, industry, law enforcement, emergency management, international affairs, and national security who have responsibilities for preventing, preparing for, or responding to pandemics or bioterrorism.

Instructors

David R. Franz, DVM, PhD

Fmr. Cmdr. USAMIID

Kendall Hoyt, PhD

Dartmouth Medical School

Gregory D. Koblentz, MPP, PhD

George Mason University

Jens H. Kuhn, MD, PhD

Tunnell Consulting and Integrated Research
Facility at Fort Detrick

Sanford L. Weiner

Massachusetts Institute of Technology

Edward H. You, MS

Federal Bureau of Investigation

Register Today!

Fee: $1195 ($1395.00 After May 15)

Registration includes: Continuing Education Units and Certificate, All Course Materials, Catered Lunches and Coffee Breaks, Networking Reception.

Discounts for GMU alumni and groups of three or more

To learn more and register: <http://spgia.gmu.edu/programs/executive-education/summer-program-international-security/>